Cable TV tunes in to complaints

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA For far too long, cable customers fumed as they waited in vain for the cable guy to show up. When he did come, sometimes it took multiple visits to fix outages. Some customers grappled with billing mistakes that took months to resolve. And cable prices went up every year.

Now it may be the cable customer's turn for revenge.

Cable TV operators are trying to treat their customers better. Consumers now can get a 30-day money-back guarantee from at least two major cable companies. Soon subscribers might set specific times for technician visits and get their orders confirmed in writing.

These sound like simple or even obvious steps, but they address longtime complaints about the cable TV business.

Cable companies are forced to do it because of intensifying competition from satellite TV and phone companies that offer video—and from people disconnecting subscription TV services altogether to watch videos online.

And people are leaving. In 2006, cable TV companies had 68.5 million video customers. The number fell to 63.3 million in 2009, according to research firm In-Stat.

Cable's customer satisfaction ratings have been among the worst of any industry. In the American Customer Satisfaction Index, based on surveys of U.S. households, the four largest cable TV providers—Comcast, Time Warner Cable Inc., Cox Communications Inc. and Charter Communications Inc.—have averaged 59 on a scale of 1 to 100 since 2004.

An invasion of oil

Associated Press

COVINGTON, La. The dire effect of the massive Gulf spill was apparent Sunday on oil-soaked islands where pelicans nest as several of the birds splashed in the water and preened themselves, apparently trying to clean crude from their feet and wings.

Pelican eggs were glazed with rust-colored gunk in the bird colony off Louisiana's coast, with thick globs floating on top of the water. Nests rested in mangrove trees precariously close to the crude that had washed in. As oil crept farther into the delicate wetlands in Barataria Bay off Louisiana, BP officials said Sunday that one of their efforts to slow the leak wasn't working as effectively as before.

BP spokesman John Curry told The Associated Press on Sunday that a mile-long tube inserted into the leaking well siphoned some 57,120 gallons of oil within the past 24 hours, a sharp drop from the 92,400 gallons of oil a day that the device was sucking up Friday. However, the company has said the amount of oil siphoned will vary widely from day to day.

6 MILLION GALLONS SPEWED

The spill began after the Deepwater Horizon oil rig exploded off the coast of Louisiana on April 20, killing 11 workers, and sank two days later. At least 6 million gallons of crude have spewed into the Gulf of Mexico since. The 1989 Exxon Valdez tanker spilled 11 million gallons of oil in Alaska.

the growing ooze as more wildlife and delicate coastal wetlands are tainted despite the oil-absorbing booms placed around shorelines to protect them.

Anger with the government and BP, which leased the rig and is responsible for cleanup, has boiled over as the spill spreads. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency chief Lisa P. Jackson was headed to Louisiana on Sunday, where she planned to visit with residents.

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar and Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano were to lead a Senate delegation to the region Monday to fly over affected areas and keep an eye on the response.

Bare your soul for some free stuff

No one likes to be rejected, but everyone loves a good contest.

That's the idea behind the "Publish This Book" Rejection Contest, sponsored by the Chicago Tribune, Printer's Row Lit Fest and me.

A big component of my memoir, "Publish This Book: The Unbelievable True Story of How I Wrote, Sold and Published This Very Book," is rejection in all its various forms. Professional rejection, personal rejection—you name the kind of getting-said-no-to and I've done it. Match.com even rejected me—not the women on it, but the actual nebulous data bits and html code that comprise the website (it found my canklles unsightly).

Of course most of us have experienced a massive, soul-crushing letdown at some point in our lives. If you haven't, you're likely a seriously deranged individual like Rupert Murdoch or Katy Perry.

That's why I'm asking you for your stories of rejection. Send your tales of no more than 400 words to hatemail@stephenmarkley.com by June 3. Then on June 7, I'll post the five best entries hand-picked by a panel of experts (me, Magic 8 Ball, my roommate Elliott) on my RedEye blog, Off the Markley.

You can debate the relative merits of the candidates in the comments section over the next four days, and based on reader input, I'll post the winner June 10. And what does the winner get for sharing this horrific personal or professional experience in a public forum?

First of all, he or she can attend the Printer's Row panel on which I'll appear with authors Jim Kokoris, Jacqueline Carey and Billy Lombardo to discuss the craft of writing June 12 (3:30 p.m. in the Burnham Room of the Hotel Blake), a "free ticket" to the Lit After Dark event (but it's just a suggested donation, so by not donating you'll just look like a jerk), an appearance on ChicagoNow radio on WGN, and, the big Kahuna, a $200 amazon.com gift card.

I know what you're saying: "So you want me to bare my soul and share with your over-stimulated, hyena-like readers one of the lowest moments of my entire existence? And you're rewarding me with some cheap consumer spending in an effort to mask the cynical ploy of appropriating my emotional and intellectual misery to sell some books and shill for the Lit Fest?"

And my answer is a wholehearted, Palin-esque, "You betcha!"

All I ask is that you try to think beyond the time your girlfriend broke up with you. Think about a kind of rejection that involved your intellectual core, a time in your life when you had to question the foundation of how you thought of yourself and where that questioning ultimately led.

Then, along with Magic 8 Ball and Elliott, I will cackle with glee at your plight—only to begin sobbing openly, yet again, at the sight of my naked canklles.

The truth about SUNSCREEN

Products with a very high SPF sell false sense of security, group says

Chicago Tribune

Peggy Lim has a healthy respect for the sun's powerful ultraviolet rays, and on a recent shopping trip she agonized over choosing a sunscreen for her three children.

"I've always heard the higher the SPF [sun protection factor] the better, until you get to SPF 45," said Lim of Crystal Lake, who finally bought whatever happened to be in front of her. "Now my husband says the SPF doesn't matter as much as how much you use. What's the right amount? Do I have to apply it under their clothes? And how bad of a mother am I if I forget to reapply it?"

Like many people, Lim wants reliable sunscreen information to help sort fact from fiction. But although the U.S. Food and Drug Administration drafted guidelines three decades ago governing the safety, efficacy and labeling of sunscreen, official rules have yet to be implemented.

Critics of the agency say the lack of formal regulations has spawned misleading claims on products and put consumers at risk by encouraging them to rely too heavily on sunscreen for protection.

The FDA expects to finalize the rules in October; they would take effect by 2012.

In the meantime, to help consumers make decisions—and light a fire under the FDA—the Environmental Working Group on Monday released its annual Sunscreen Safety Guide, which rates sunscreens, lip balms and moisturizers, and features a database searchable by brand name. On Tuesday, Consumer Reports will issue its sunscreen guide.

The EWG, an advocacy group that has waged a four-year campaign promoting strict sun-safety standards, slammed the majority of the 1,400 products it tested. It recommends only 39 of 500 beach and sport sunscreens, primarily because of what it called "a surge in exaggerated SPF claims above 50" and concerns about ingredients in the products.

"Hats, clothing and shade are still the only completely reliable sun protection," said Jane Houlihan, EWG's vice president for research.

In fact, the long-delayed FDA rules would update labels to stress the importance of a comprehensive approach to sun protection that encourages seeking shade and covering up.

Research has found that people who use sunscreen tend to stay in the sun longer than they might otherwise. That is particularly true if a product has a high SPF number, ratings the Environmental Working Group says "sell a false sense of security."

The group reported a 33 percent increase from last year in the number of products labeled with an SPF higher than 50. But the new federal guidelines would cap SPF claims at 50+ because there's little evidence that higher SPF products offer more protection.

SPF numbers, a familiar but baffling system for consumers, primarily measure protection from the UVB (ultraviolet light with a shorter wavelength) rays that cause sunburn.

DID YOU KNOW?

Sunscreen can help protect against sunburn, but contrary to what most people think, it hasn't yet been shown to prevent skin cancer or premature skin aging, according to the FDA.

A product labeled SPF 15 blocks about 93 percent of the sun's UVB rays; an SPF 50 protects against about 98 percent, said Dr. Henry Lim, chairman of the department of dermatology at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit.

Because 100 percent blockage isn't possible, products labeled SPF 70 or 100 don't make much sense, Lim said.

"Rather than increasing SPF factor, the push now is to make a sunscreen product cover both UVA and UVB—how to make it broader," he said.

UVA (ultraviolet light with a longer wavelength) radiation facilitates tanning but also can damage the DNA of cells deep within the skin, contributing to cancer and aging.

Though many products are labeled "broad spectrum," consumers can't currently tell how much protection a sunscreen provides against UVA rays.

The Environmental Working Group reported it found that one popular children's sunscreen marketed as SPF 100 had a UVA protection factor of 9.

Under the proposed guidelines, labeling would be expanded to include a four-star system that tells consumers how well the product protects against UVA rays.

The term "waterproof" would be prohibited, and labels on water-resistant sunscreens would have to state how often the products need to be reapplied.

The FDA also wants to tweak SPF testing procedures and allow new combinations of active ingredients.

In Europe, 30 active ingredients are approved for use, compared with 16 in the U.S., according to Dr. Patricia Agin, a fellow in skin care research and development at Merck Consumer Care, a division of Merck & Co. Inc. that manufactures Coppertone.

One sunscreen ingredient flagged as risky by the Environmental Working Group is oxybenzone, which boosts UVA protection and is FDA approved. The group cites lab studies suggesting it has an estrogenic effect and can be absorbed into the bloodstream.

"It's very preliminary but troubling," Houlihan said.

Others say absorption alone isn't enough to raise an alarm. "I'm not closing my mind on the issue, but based on the data I don't see any concern with oxybenzone," Dr. Lim said.

The EWG's top-rated sunscreen products, which include the brands All Terrain, Badger, Beyond Coastal and California Baby, all contain either zinc or titanium minerals, which offer more UVA protection than products with a different ingredient called avobenzone, Houlihan said.

Peggy Lim chose two SPF 50 products marked as "pediatrician tested" for her children.

"When I was a kid, my mom tossed us outside for the summer and told us a healthy tan was a good thing," she said with a sigh. "It was easier then."

THE SUNSCREEN CHECKLIST

How much sunscreen should you use?

Enough to fill a shot glass, according to the American Academy of Dermatology, though larger people should adjust accordingly. Most people apply a quarter to half of the recommended amount of sunscreen, which lowers the advertised SPF factor.

► Spread it on liberally 15 to 30 minutes before going outside and reapply every two hours or after swimming, sweating or towel drying.

SOME OTHER FACTORS TO CONSIDER WHEN USING SUNSCREEN:

Sprays and powders: The Environmental Working Group recommends against these products, which can be accidentally inhaled. Others say there's little risk of harm. "I wouldn't recommend spraying sunscreen into your nose, but the amount you'll inhale is no worse than walking behind a diesel bus," said Dr. David Leffell, chief of dermatologic surgery and cutaneous oncology at the Yale School of Medicine and a consultant for Coppertone.

Vitamin D: Don't forget, the body needs sunlight to make this vital chemical. The National Institutes of Health suggests 5 to 30 minutes of sun exposure between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. several times a week on the face, arms, legs and back during the warmer months. After that, seek shade, cover up, wear a hat and sunglasses and use sunscreen. Speaking of covering up, the FDA has not advised using sunscreen under regular clothing. It also doesn't regulate clothing that claims to offer UV protection.

Nanoparticles: Sunscreen labels don't say whether the products contain nanoparticles. Studies have shown that nano-scale ingredients don't penetrate healthy skin, so consumer use should be minimal. But if you want to avoid them until more is known, look for the white-colored zinc or titanium oxide products. If mineral-based sunscreens are clear, they likely have nanoparticles.

Combo products: Insect repellents aren't necessarily safe for frequent application. But you do have to keep reapplying sunscreen, so you may want to avoid combination products.

Retinyl palmitate: The EWG recommends avoiding products with a vitamin A derivative called retinyl palmitate. Preliminary data suggest topical applications can enhance the rate of UV-induced skin tumor formation in lab mice, said Dr. Allan Conney, director of the Susan Lehman Cullman Laboratory for Cancer Research at Rutgers University. Epidemiological studies would be needed to determine whether humans are at risk.

BOY'S BODY FOUND

FAMILY FINDS CLOSURE AFTER WEEKLONG SEARCH OF RIVER

Chicago Tribune

A child's body found Sunday morning in the North Branch of the Chicago River was identified as that of Cashmere Castillo, an 8-year-old boy who disappeared last weekend in the water a little more than a mile upstream.

The Cook County medical examiner positively identified the boy Sunday afternoon. Cashmere's parents, Willy and Merrell Castillo, viewed the body at the medical examiner's office and took a moment to grieve privately before returning to the waiting room where other relatives had gathered, Willy Castillo said.

"I have a lot of closure now that we've found my boy," he said.

The body was found just before 11 a.m. in the river behind a water treatment facility in River Park near Lawrence and Francisco avenues in Ravenswood, Chicago police said.

According to a law enforcement source, police dogs trained to find cadavers detected a scent in the area Saturday and police focused their search efforts there.

After police cut off a lock to gain access into a fenced-in area next to the building and the river, a vehicle was driven into the area. About a dozen fire and police officials also moved in and cordoned off the area with red tape. Cement stairs lead from the building to the river.

The body was taken from the river's edge to a Chicago police van, which then drove from the scene. Traffic along Francisco Avenue had been blocked between Ainslie Street and Lawrence Avenue while the effort was in progress.

Willy Castillo crouched near an ambulance in a parking lot next to the building and was consoled by Chicago police officers and fire personnel.

Cashmere's body was driven to the Cook County medical examiner's office, where an autopsy is scheduled for Monday. A service memorializing the child was scheduled for Sunday in Chicago.

"It's a closure for us," said Elizabeth Hagad, who had baby-sat Cashmere since he was 2. "We have been wondering what happened. Now we know. We have been praying all day that someone would find him."

Man sues over Lincoln Park 'Enemies' set

Chicago Tribune

Nearly 76 years after he was killed, outlaw John Dillinger still appears to be wreaking havoc on Chicago's streets.

To be more precise, the film set for 2009's "Public Enemies," which starred Johnny Depp, wreaked havoc on pedestrian John McManus, who tripped and fell on fake trolley tracks, according to a lawsuit filed in Cook County Circuit Court.

To transport the street back to the 1930s, movie crews installed rubber cobblestones and trolley tracks, among other measures, around the historic Biograph Theater. Dillinger was gunned down outside the theater in July 1934. McManus, who was crossing Lincoln Avenue at the Fullerton and Halsted intersection on foot one morning in May 2008, walked over the fake rubber cobblestones.

McManus' feet sank into the rubber and his left foot got caught underneath metal trolley tracks. He fell and was severely injured, the lawsuit filed Wednesday alleges. The suit doesn't detail the exact nature of the injuries. No signs, barriers or warnings existed to alert McManus to the fake stone and tracks, the lawsuit alleges.

Named in the complaint are NBC Universal Inc. and its subsidiaries, PE Productions LLC and Universal City Studios LLLP, and other unknown defendants.

McManus is seeking damages in excess of $50,000 for permanent physical injuries.

Man dragged by cab dies

A 32-year-old Near West Side man who was dragged by a cab after arguing with the driver last week died Saturday of his injuries. Witnesses said Daniel Firkins was leaning in a window of a taxi while arguing with the driver when the cab took off, dragging him for a block before running over his legs May 14.

2 girls hurt in fall from Rogers Park window

Two 6-year-old girls were hurt Sunday when they fell from the window of a building in Rogers Park, Chicago police said.

The incident happened shortly before 10 a.m. at Morse Avenue and Ashland Boulevard.

Car linked to missing student

Authorities were investigating if a body found in a green Honda Civic in Belmont Harbor on Sunday is that of a Roosevelt University student who was reported missing earlier this month. The body was found in a car matching the color, make and model of one driven by Syed Naqi, 22, of Elk Grove Village.

Chatham turns out for rally

Chicago Police Officer Thomas Wortham IV, who was killed Thursday by gunfire near his parents' Chatham home, was to have joined hundreds of residents Sunday in reclaiming the community plagued by recent gun violence. Neighbors still came to Nat King Cole Park in solidarity. "If we're in the park, the bad guys stay out," said Ald. Freddrenna Lyle (6th).

Hunt for clues after India crash kills 158

6 MANGALORE, India Grieving relatives collected the victims' remains from a crashed Indian plane and investigators sifted through the rubble Sunday for the cockpit voice recorder and the flight data recorder after India's worst air disaster in more than a decade killed 158 people.

Eight people survived Saturday's crash of an Air India Boeing 737-800 that overshoot a hilltop runway southern India and plunged over a cliff, officials said. Some of the survivors managed to jump from the wreckage just before it burst into flames.

Recovery of the black boxes is crucial for determining what went wrong with the aircraft as it came in for a landing after a flight from Dubai in the United Arab Emirates.

Investigators used cutters to search for the black boxes in the twisted wreckage of the aircraft, which was scattered along the hillside of thick grass and trees just outside Mangalore's Bajpe airport.

A four-member U.S. forensic team also arrived in India to help in the investigation, said Harpreet Singh, an Air India spokeswoman. She refused to speculate on the cause of the crash.

Air India, the country's national carrier, runs inexpensive flights under the Air India Express banner to Dubai and other Middle Eastern destinations where millions of Indians are employed.

A report on Iranian state TV's website quoted Haidar Moslehi as saying once Washington makes a similar humanitarian gesture toward Iranians in U.S. custody, "then we may get to the stage of whether or not there would be a swap."

Moslehi also said Sunday it is "clear and obvious" the three are spies.

In March, President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad proposed an exchange of the three Americans with detained Iranians.

FINALS, FANS ROCK UNITED CENTER

RedEye

What does 22,224 Blackhawks fans celebrating in unison sound like? A lot like any rock concert the United Center hosts. Literally. RedEye joined the party on Madison Street on Sunday, and we brought our decibel meter along to find out exactly how loud Hawks nation can be as the team's quest for its first trip to the Stanley Cup finals since 1992 continued. Here are our unscientific findings.

COMMON NOISE LEVELS

To get an idea how loud Hawks fans can be, here's a list of common noise decibel levels according to the Purdue University department of chemistry.

- » Jet takeoff/150/eardrum rupture
- » Aircraft carrier deck/140
- » Military jet with afterburner/130
- » Chain saw/120/painful
- » Live rock music/110/average human pain threshold
- » Motorcycle/100/serious damage possible under eight-hour exposure
- » Newspaper press/90
- » Garbage disposal/80
- » Vacuum cleaner/70/upper 70s are annoyingly loud to some people.

Sweep home, Chicago

Chicago Tribune

Captain Serious, Big Buff, Nemo, The Rat, Joe Dirt and the rest of the Blackhawks are headed to the Stanley Cup finals.

The Hawks' eclectic mix of players continued its march toward hockey's ultimate prize, capping a four-game sweep of the Sharks in the Western Conference finals with a 4-2 victory Sunday at the United Center. It's the Hawks' first berth in the Stanley Cup finals since 1992.

Jonathan Toews, Dustin Byfuglien, Antti Niemi, Dave Bolland and Patrick Kane were just some of the heroes—Duncan Keith made a remarkable comeback after losing seven teeth in the second period to assist on the tying goal—as the Hawks dispatched the No. 1 seed in the conference with their fifth consecutive victory and now await the winner of the Eastern Conference finals between Montreal and Philadelphia.

"It's what we worked hard for all year," said Keith, who was hit in the mouth with a puck but returned to assist on Bolland's goal as the Hawks erased a 2-0 Sharks lead. "It's what we dreamed about as kids. There's nothing more that I want to do than get it started."

Byfuglien scored the winning goal with 5 minutes, 55 seconds remaining in the third period after taking a pinpoint pass from Kane and beating goaltender Evgeni Nabokov from the slot. That made a winner of Niemi, who finished with 16 saves as he improved to 12-4 during his first NHL postseason. Toews picked up an assist on the play to extend his team-record postseason points streak to 13 games.

"It feels great," said Niemi, who yielded Logan Couture's even-strength goal in the first period and Patrick Marleau's shorthanded score in the second before shutting down the Sharks the rest of the way. "We didn't want to get too carried away before this game, but right now, it feels great."

1 What's the most surprising thing about the Blackhawks-San Jose series?	Probably that Niemi became the protector of the island.	That it was over before the Sharks could even put their fins together and pray.	That Carlos Silva is 6-0 for the Cubs.	How meager Jonathan Toews' playoff beard is. Seriously, I had a longer beard in high school.	That LeBron has been rumored to be scalping tickets ... after he buys his house in Chicago, of course!
2 How loud could you get in the stands at a Blackhawks game?	I could go to 11.	Gimme a sack of White Castle and a traffic cone and, oh yes, there will be thunder.	At least as loud as Craig Sager's wardrobe.	As loud as Banshee of the X-Men—ear-piercingly loud!	Louder than all the "Lost" snobs complaining about the series finale.
3 Who would scare you more in the Stanley Cup Finals: Montreal or Philadelphia?	Scared? Please.	Duncan Keith took a puck in the face and laughed about it later. WE FEAR NOTHING.	Philadelphia. Rocky might be coaxed out of retirement.	Philadelphia, not for the team, but the fans. THEY. ARE. SCARY.	Philly. Google "Philly fan vomits on kid."
4 Interleague play is to baseball as "experimenting" in college was to Silverman.	... Thong Week is to Silvy's underwear rotation.	... shiny objects are to babies, when it comes to Chicago baseball.	... Racing stripes are to my '91 Nissan Sentra. Why do I have them again?	What is this baseball sport you speak about. Do we have it in Chicago?
5 Fans booed Danica Patrick at Indy on Saturday. What's that mean?	It means she wasn't driving a convertible.	All she's given the sport are those Go Daddy ads. Time to equip her car with an ejector seat.	She didn't crash enough.	A Playboy shoot is in her future.	She stopped short in the Go Daddy commercial.

TRADEWINDS BLOWING

According to espn.com, a top Phillies scout was looking at the White Sox this week, concentrating on closer Bobby Jenks. The Phillies also are interested in reliever J.J. Putz, who had extensive experience as a setup man and closer and would fit nicely into the Phillies' bullpen mix. He also is appealing because his commitment is only one year at $3 million.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I don't have any excuses. If I don't put the ball down, I get hit."

New spice to Bears' D

Julius Peppers, offseason changes radically alter defense

Chicago Tribune

We have talked about the Bears offense until we became navy blue and orange in the face. But really, there is much more to talk about with the Bears defense.

With minicamp came this realization: The defense is radically different from the unit that finished the 2009 season.

There is a new coordinator in Rod Marinelli, who has his own ideas about how to deploy personnel, tweak the scheme and call defenses.

As many as six players who didn't start for the majority of last season could start this year: ends Julius Peppers and Mark Anderson, linebackers Brian Urlacher and Pisa Tinoisamoa and safeties Chris Harris and Major Wright. And both cornerbacks are in new places, Charles Tillman on the right and Zack Bowman on the left.

This defense has something else the 2009 version did not have much of: confidence.

"All the adds are positive," linebacker Lance Briggs said after the last minicamp practice Sunday. "I just feel confident, and a lot of guys do. That confidence is going to be huge going into training camp."

You could see it on the fields behind Halas Hall, where players whooped and hollered after defensive backs broke on throws and got their hands on balls. Or when Peppers came off the edge like a twister.

The confidence starts before the snap, with Urlacher—whom Smith calls the quarterback of the defense—back in the middle lining players up.

"He has a presence in the huddle," Marinelli said. "He can communicate. He can run the defense. That's a confident feeling, and that huddle is about confidence. He gets everybody aligned and set. His play will speak for itself."

If LeBron James isn't sure he can win in Cleveland, President Obama thinks there's an opportunity with his hometown Bulls. "You know, like I said, I don't want to meddle," Obama told TNT. Smashing Pumpkins

"Teargarden by Kaleidyscope, Vol. 1: Songs for a Sailor"
(Rocket Science)

Call me a bad Chicagoan, but I've never been a huge Smashing Pumpkins fan. Maybe it's Billy Corgan's nasal whine and slashing guitar style, or maybe I can't help but be a little turned off by him as a person. (You don't need to ask why, do you?) Whatever it is, I'm the guy at the party arguing that Zwan's one album is my favorite thing Corgan's ever done. So I'm sure you can guess what I think of the lone remaining original Pumpkin's over-the-top, absurdly titled project to record a 44-song album and release one track at a time over the Internet. "Songs for a Sailor" is the first four-song EP from "Teargarden," and overall it's perfectly fine. Corgan's voice, take it or leave it, sounds the same as ever, and "A Stitch in Time" twinkles and strums while proving that Corgan's best work often comes when he's cooling off, not trying to heat up. The quietly ruminative "A Song for a Son" likewise appeals by pairing Corgan's abrasive voice with a lovely piano-acoustic guitar melody. "Widow Wake My Mind," on the other hand, is just irritating, and the Pumpkins looked pathetically uncool doing it on Leno a few weeks back. "Astral Planes" also isn't powerful enough to become the driving rocker it wants to be. Stay calm, Billy, and people will like you more.

All visits will take place in downtown Chicago.

- Eligible participants must:

Sun
soulJill Scott
APNew mom Jill Scott sings praises of acting, songwriting

By Kyra Kyles

REDEYE

Jill Scott investigates cases for HBO's "No. 1 Ladies Detective Agency."

She reps for fed-up, all-cried-out women everywhere in Tyler Perry's "Why Did I Get Married Too?"

And no doubt fans can't wait to sunbathe in the sounds of her upcoming album, "The Light of the Sun," which features collabos with Anthony Hamilton, super producer Terry Lewis and longtime microphone co-conspirator, Black Thought from The Roots. "Light" is expected to arrive in August.

What more can the soul singer, actress, poet and new mom do? Well, she can tour. Scott is set to perform Tuesday with Maxwell at the United Center. Talk about a killer combo of soul singers.

RedEye picked Scott's brain about her current and upcoming projects, whom she would love to duet with and which show she'd guest star on if given the chance.

So, Jill Scott in Chicago, huh? How do you like our city?

I love Chicago. I love the shopping, the freedom, the food and the people. Everybody's so cool. I feel really free. I tend to go out by myself while I'm there.

I know a lot of music fans are looking forward to your concert. Will you and Maxwell perform together?

I think we're performing individually. We haven't rehearsed together. I'm hoping something like that will happen, but there are no guarantees."

Outside of Maxwell, are there artists out there you'd like to duet with?

So many people. Nas, Jay-Z, Missy Elliott, definitely Barbra Streisand, Bette Midler, Sting, Michael Buble, Prince ... just so many people that I appreciate. I'm a music fan ... I love passion. It excites me when a person puts their whole self in a song or rhyme, or instrument. It fills me.

It seems your career is taking off in all different directions. If you had to choose between singing and acting, which would you choose?

Honestly, for me, there is no separation at all. When I write songs, I live inside of that moment. When acting, I live inside the moment. I couldn't choose.

What first interested you in acting?

I dropped out of school. I was at Temple University, working two jobs and it was not necessarily working out. ... I needed a job and got a phone call about an apprenticeship at a theater company with free classes if they could work you like slave. I got $150 a week and worked 14 hours, six days a week. They gave me a crash course of Arthur

Miller and [Stephen]

Sondheim, Shakespeare and the list goes on and on. Everything seemed to suit me so well. I thought: "This is where need to be."

The Tyler Perry movie did well at the box office. Has it changed the way casting directors see you?

Well, I mean I still have to audition for things. I had six auditions before I got the "No. 1 Ladies' Detectives Agency." I think I'm being taken seriously, which is nice, because there's a stigma when a vocal artist or entertainer tries their hand at acting. Most times actors don't take us seriously, because they imagine you were hired just to bring people into the box office. I feel like I'm getting to another level. I'm getting appreciated for what I do. [Laughs.] I hope I'm not speaking too quickly.

What is your ideal movie role?

I would like to play someone very dark. That's the direction I'd like to go in. I would like to play someone drastically different than myself.

Are there any shows you'd like to be a guest on?

I love to be on "Fringe." I love that show. It reminds me of "The X Files" and that was my show. I like the whole idea of something beyond what we can see or understand.

Hey, "X-Files" is "my" show.

Well, that's something we just have to share.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! Gemini

May 21-June 21

The sun in your sign is spurring you on to do crazy things. You'll write a passionate note to that cutie you've been crushing on, describing all the naughty things you want to do to his or her body. Just make sure that it reaches the right addressee.

Cancer June 22-July 22

You've become an addict. You want to spend every waking moment with your honey, indulging in steamy sex and intimate pillow chat. But you probably should let your boyfriend go home and walk his dog.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

You know how you're really good at being truthful? Stop it. Mars is showing you that honesty isn't always the best policy. Don't tell your girlfriend she's gained weight. Don't mention increased hair loss to your boyfriend.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

As Saturn marches ahead in your sign, a project that was on hold will move forward. If you were waiting to announce your sexual intentions to someone, now is the time to make your lusty desires known. You'll have an excellent chance of having a positive outcome.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

You're feeling lazier than usual, thanks to the moon. You don't want to clean the house, go shopping or pay bills. You'd rather avoid showering for a week too. If you live alone, this is fine. But if you expect to impress a significant someone, at least make an effort.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

You could be fantasizing about the one who got away. You're wondering what happened to your high school sweetheart. Venus is warning you not to get obsessive. Picture your former flame 50 pounds heavier. That should do it.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Uranus isn't making things any easier for you. This wacky planet is stirring up trouble. Just when you thought you and your honey were headed for Blissville, you end up in Wrong Turn Alley. Expect complications and melodrama.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

You're in a practical mood, thanks to Saturn. If your significant other isn't keeping his or her side of the bargain, you'll consider an escape plan. Snoring, nighttime farts and other imperfections could be weighing heavily on your mind.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

You could go too far with someone. Maybe you just have a casual interest in that certain cutie, but something will make you seduce him. Or perhaps you know what upsets your girlfriend, and you'll decide to tease her mercilessly for no good reason.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

Dreamy Venus is putting you in the fantasy zone. You're convinced that you can find an all-natural girl who just happens to look like your favorite porn star. Or you're certain that, with very little effort, you can marry a guy who is richer than Bill Gates. Dream on.

Aries March 21-April 19

A moon opposition has you wondering if you're cursed. Romance is more complicated than ever, and you're convinced your lover is either cheating on you or living a secret life as a werewolf. You're probably wrong about one of these things.

Taurus April 20-May 20

Your honey is extra needy now, so ignore that video game or porn download and spend some quality time together. Venus says be supportive instead of self-absorbed. A little "Sweetie, everything's going to be OK" will go a long way.

GOT A TIP?

Do you have a hot tip on a celebrity sighting in Chicago? E-mail Luis or tweet him @luisarroyave.

A half-hour after performing at the Allstate Arena on Friday, rapper-singer B.o.B. sat in his dressing room with his sunglasses still on and a vodka drink at his side wondering why he had the "Alvin and the Chipmunks" soundtrack on his laptop.

"I don't even remember buying it," said B.o.B., laughing. "I think somebody [else] may have bought it."

Figuring I'd want to hear it for some reason, B.o.B. played the intro for "Ain't No Party" on his laptop and rapped along to the lyric "Ain't no party like a Chipmunk party."

The show-and-tell portion of the interview didn't end there. "B.o.B., real name Bobby Ray Simmons, played a rough edit of his upcoming "Airplanes" music video on his laptop. He bobbed his head as he watched the video and seemed most excited when Paramore lead singer Hayley Williams, sporting two buns in her hair, first appeared onscreen.

"We haven't even met," he said of Williams, who recorded her part of the song and video separately. "But we've talked."

"Airplanes" helped make B.o.B.'s "The Adventures of Bobby Ray" the No. 1 album on the Billboard chart this month. The song is No. 3 on the Billboard Hot 100 while his other hit, "Nothin' on You," is No. 4.

B.o.B. performed at the Coachella festival last month (he broke out his guitar for a few songs) and will take the stage at Lollapalooza in August. Although he's honored to be one of three hip-hop acts selected to play Lolla, he hasn't let it get to his head.

"The diverse sound of my music makes it a good fit for that demographic," said B.o.B., whose album features cameos by Eminem, Lupe Fiasco and Weezer's Rivers Cuomo. "But they do have me performing at 11:30 a.m., so ..."

JUNE 18
JUNE 19

That's when "Birdemic: Shock and Terror," a hilariously inept thriller that has developed a cult following, comes to the Music Box Theatre, 3733 N. Southport Ave. Director James Nguyen is scheduled to be there. Be sure to check out the trailer online; the special effects and acting are truly awful.

Emma Watson

A high for Hermione

Emma Watson is ready to experiment with illegal substances—and we're not talking Polyjuice Potion here. The "Harry Potter" star is in talks to star in the film version of "The Perks of Being a Wallflower," variety.com reports. The popular (and often challenged) book deals with teen sex and drug use during high school. Who knew Hermione was into illicit wand usage?

$71.3 million

Mean green

"Shrek Forever After," aided by pricey 3-D tickets, hauled in $71.3 million over the weekend for the top spot at the domestic box office, but it was far less than the last "Shrek" outing. "Iron Man 2" dropped to second with $26.6 million. In a flaccid sixth place was "MacGruber" with $4.1 million.

Set your freaking alarm clock, Miss Lohan

After a sunny sojourn in southern France, Lindsay Lohan has made her way back to L.A. A judge had harsh words for LiLo last week because she missed a hearing regarding her progress in a DUI case. Lohan has a mandatory court date early Monday morning.

Lohan

'Show'-down

In a faceoff that would be nearly as cool as Vader vs. Skywalker, "Tonight Show" host Conan O'Brien may take on "Tonight Show" host Jay Leno at this year's Emmy awards, the L.A. Times reports. Both versions of the show have been submitted for nomination in the best variety series category.

Michaels still rockin'

Bret Michaels was in the house for the live "Celebrity Apprentice" finale Sunday, and the Donald chose him as the winner. Michaels has been in and out of the hospital lately.

'LOST' & FOUND

We just have to talk about the end of "Lost," but we don't want to ruin things for you, so we've employed some redacting skills we learned from the government.

The "Lost" characters who kept us tuning in all these years got their moments to shine in the series finale Sunday even as events spun out of control, the Tribune's Maureen Ryan writes. In the end, [REDACTED] was able to kill [REDACTED] and restore [REDACTED] to the island, and several survivors [REDACTED]. Throughout the action-packed and emotion-filled finale, we saw the survivors rely on each other and help each other in countless ways. And that was really the theme of the finale, and of the show—how putting faith in other people can create miracles. The Sideways world was [REDACTED]. All the people assembled [REDACTED]. And the closing image was, of course, [REDACTED].
